ANCIENT JESTS.

Blackwood's Magazine has a review of the new collection of ancient Greek jests of Hierocles and Philager. The following extract will give an idea of them:

"Another abundant class of stories are those of the confusion which results from sleeping and dreaming. We read in Hierocles that a man met a fool, and said to him: 'Sir blockhead, I saw and spoke to you in my sleep!'
A thousands pardons, was his reply; 'I was so busy I didn't hear you.' In like manner some one said to another simpleton: 'Demeas, I saw you here, three days back, in my dreams. 'You lie!' ne replied, 'I was in the country.' Another worthy dreamed he was selling a sucking pig, for which he asked a hundred pence. Some one bid him fivy; he stoutly refused and in his energy woke up. As pig and money were alike denied to his waking sight, he speedily closed his eyes again and, extending his palm, said to the dreamland bidder, 'Well, well, let's have the fifty!'

"A variation of this class is the story of the two fools, one of whom dreamed that he had trodden on a pail, and straightway (on waking) bandaged his foot. His comrade, having asked and learned the reason, delivered himself of the sage observation: 'Rightly are we called foolish; for why ever do you go to rest without your shoes on?'

"The doctors and their patients are not forgotten in the old jests. There is the ease of one who, having had his uvula operated upon, was bidden not to talk. Accordingly, he desired his slave to return for him the salutations of those who bade him good-morrow; but, when this was done, kept saying to each in the fullness of his courtesy: 'Don't take it as an affront if my slave salutes you in my stead; my medical man has bidden me not to talk.' Another fool being sick agreed with the doctor that he would pay him a fee if cured. So when his wife blamed him for drinking when in a high state of fever, he retorted, 'What! do you want me to get well, then, and have to pay the doctor

"A man is told of, who, seeing a physician coming, slipp d out of sight. A friend ob-serving this asked the reason. 'Well,' said' the other, "tis some time since I have been sick, and really I'm ashamed to be seen by him.'

"Another story is: 'A doctor gave up a Cuntern patient. The patient recovered, and shirked the doctor. On the latter inquiring the reason, the explanation was as follows: 'Why, you said I was dying, and so I'm asham ed to be alive and well.

"Among the old stories which are very old, and still current in some shape, are those of the order to stuff a pitcher, that has served as a bolster, with feathers, by way of making it softer; that of the simpleton, who, wanting to cross the river in a hurry, preferred to ride into the ferry boat and not alight; that of the man who, going to it quire for a sick friend, was told by his widow. 'Alas, he's gone !' and simply replied, 'It he returns, will you say I called?' that of him who, when called to task for usurping his hall porter's functions and saying, 'Not at home' with his owo lips, proceeded to pick a quarrel with his visitor because he doubted his word, though he would have believed his slave's; that of the host whose guests enjoyed a collared head so much that they vowed they would dine with him next day, upon which he went to his butcher and ordered another head off the same pig; which is worthy to figure side by side with the Irish spirit merchant's advertisement, that he still had on sale a small quantity of the whiskey which was drunk by his late Majesty while in Dublin.

A curious parallel to the story told by the Tichborne claimant has recently come to light in England. It is said to be an actual occurrence, which took place in the very neighborhood in Australia where the claimant first appeared. A young English nobleman having talien into dissipation left England, sailed about the world, and finally reached Australia, There he took service as a shepherd, and for several years kept sheep for a farmer. One day, while packing up something in a piece of an English newspaper, his eye was caught by an advertisement stating that his father had died, the title and property fallen to himself, and offering £200 for his discovery. This shepherd lord actually managed to get the money offered for the discovery of himself, drank it up, but has refused to leave Australia. Knowing the family banker, he sends pretty regularly for money; but he has never, like the claimant now in prison, sent to a different banker from the one with which he himself had ordered his money to be deposited.

M. DE VILLEMESSANT, the editor of The Figaro, passes for a lucky man in Paris, and a man of wit. His personality is very useful to his paper, and with his 80,000 subscribers he knows how to manage the public. Lucky he has always been at every game of life except trente et quarante aud baccarat; witty he always is. Recently in the green-room of the Theatre Francais, Molle Favart ran up to him. "M. de Villemessant! how can you permit such calumnies? Your Figuro says I am forty years old." "Well," answered Villemessant gayly, "kiss me as many times as that estimate slanders you." Mdlle. Favart threw herself on the neck of M de Villemessant and kissed him ten times, distributing the favors equally on his two cheeks. "Very well," said M de Villemessant, "hereafter The Figaro will tell the truth, and instead of forty years will give you fifty. The British ship Alexandra, which was launched at Chatham recently, is, with the exception of Her Majesty's ship Fury, the most powerful vessel of war the world has yet seen. She was built under the name of the Superb, but hes been christened Alexandra, in compliment to Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Edinburgh. The Alexandra is a spleudid vessel. She is of the box and belt type, having a double-storied central battery and an extra thickness of armor along the water line. Her guus will be more numerous than those of the Fury, which carries four, but the heaviest will thirty-eight ton guns of the latter, and her armor E. S. LEADBEATER & BRO. only amount to twenty five tons as against the will be twelve inches thich instead of fourteen. As a masted vessel the Alexandra is a noble specimen of the modern iron-clad.
